

SLOSSON THE CHAMPION.

REMARKABLE BILLIARDS IN THE LAST GAME OF THE TOURNAMENT.

WITH LIVES LACKING ONLY TWO POINTS, HIS OPPONENT MAKES A RUN OF SIXTY AND WINS THE CONTEST.

George F. Slosson, by a wonderful exhibition of nerve, uphili fighting and beautiful billiard shots, last evening in the billiard tournament at Madison Square Garden, secured an almost impossible victory from the grasp of his opponent, Frank C. Ives, and won the game, the tournament, a handsome trophy, a large cash prize and the championship of the world. To do this he put up the most remarkable game of the five days' tournament, and amid constant applause netted 136 points in the final game, leaving only two points to go, and in that run some superb and almost impossible shots were made.

Ives had started off the game, and indifferent billiards was played up to the thirty-third inning, when Slosson, by a series of shots, secured 62 and 39, with the one exception of two, left the ball in the position he desired, and the twenty-second inning.

In the thirty-second inning Ives had raised his lead to the apparently safe one of 120. In the two next innings he cracked ducks' eggs, and Slosson pulled ten from his lead. In the thirty-fifth inning Ives netted 24, increasing his lead to 134 points, while Slosson took his turn at a duck.

In the first half of the final game Ives secured only two points, leaving a lead of 136 points. In the second half Ives, Ives, 42; Slosson, 38. Ives had the score standing 78 points more to make, while his opponent had 214.

Then the unexpected happened. Slosson caught the balls just right and got them rolling in perfect form. He ran off 50 points in quick order, and when he turned the half hundred mark he was in a position to be applauded and cheered. He kept up his work, and in the middle of the game with Ives working on the middle of the carroms, rounding the 60, 70, 80 and 90 marks made the greatest enthusiasm. Still he kept them going for seven more prettily executed shots, but failed within three points of the century mark. That brought him within 29 points of Ives, the score being: Ives, 42; Slosson, 283.

Ives was worried a trifle, and began a little harder billiard playing, and lost run-chewing. He netted 24, increasing his lead to 70. The next few innings passed amid intense silence, as Ives gradually worked up to the 474 point, while Slosson could not get beyond 440. In the forty-first inning Ives corralled a pretty run of 24, and failed on an easy cushion shot, only two short of running 500. At this point Slosson still lacked 60 of the coveted 500, yet with almost absolute calm before him he went to work, and in a series of shots, he ran off 50 points, and in the thirty-fifth inning he was within one point of the century mark. It was the best billiard-playing that has been seen in the tournament. As it began to be realized that he was playing winning billiards, each shot was breathlessly awaited and liberally applauded. One of his most difficult shots was a bank shot, which he executed with perfect accuracy, and the ball struck the cue ball close to the rail. When he made it, the spectators arose to their feet and bowed.

Still he kept the tables rolling with matches precision, making fifty-nine points, one ahead of Ives, and within one of the goal. Every one was standing and cheering, and the air was full of excitement. Ives, however, was not to be deterred, and he continued to play, and in the thirty-seventh inning he netted 24, increasing his lead to 70.
